RUSSIA

SIBERIAN BROWN BEAR

Ursus arctos collaris

Siberian brown bear is intermediate in size between Eurasian and Kamchatka brown bears. The fur is long, soft and dense. The color is usually dark brown with noticeably darker legs. The Siberian brown bear has the largest habitat in Russia. The typical Siberian brown bear runs between eight and eight and a half feet (2,40 – 2,60 m). Occasionally a nine-foot (2,75 m) bear will be taken. Expect extensive walking. Hip boots are mandatory.

It is advantageous to hunt brown bear in spring-time since they are in move searching for food on open mountain slopes. Moreover, the quality of hides in early spring is superior over those harvested in fall.

The suggested hunting area is plentiful with bears and unfrequented by hunters. You will hunt in a real wild mountain taiga. 3 to 4 bears can be encountered a day.
